Hi, has anyone found the endangered rock drake and or Wyvern slots? I've been looking for them for quite some time but cant I find anything!?!? Page 2 9 comments This article is about content only on steam, Xbox One, PS4, Epic Games.This creature, item or feature version has not yet been released in the Nintendo Switch version. This article is about DLC-specific content: Aberration Rock Drake Eggs ARK Aberration-DLC elements: Survival Evolved. It is used to hatch Rock Drake, which can be used to make Extraordinary Kibble (previously Kibble (Rock Drake Egg)) and basilisk as a main domestication food source. Overview [editing | source editing] Rock Drake Eggs are randomly dropped by Rock Drakes. They can be eaten or used to make Extraordinary Kibble to tame Astrocetus, Griffin, Megalania, Rock Elemental, Thylacoleo and Yutyranus.The Rock Drake. Grabbing an egg in the presence of the Wild Rock Drakes will cause them to be hostile and attack survivors. Acquisition[edit | source] Rock Drake Eggs are only found in the Lost Tomb, behind a twin waterfall under Element Falls. There is different yellow lighting in this area. There are many indenties along the walls, some of which will include a nest with a Rock Drake Egg. After stealing eggs, any nearby (in Element Falls) wild Rock Drake player will start attacking. The lack of flying creatures available in heresy combined with wild rock drakes' small rotation radius and ability to glide during follow-up makes it quite dangerous to obtain these eggs. Since the location is located within a radiation area, it is recommended to wear a full Hazard Suit. The location is also recommended for the emergence of a possible point for Anonymous packages, so bringing the light source to charge is like Lantern Pets. Using a Rock Drake [edit | source edit] If you have an already domesticated Rock Drake, they are the easiest way to get an egg, like slipping from the nest, climbing around waterfalls, and immune to radiation poisoning. Wild Rock Drake will not gently accept the domesticated Rock Drake even when camouflaged, after the egg is taken. Without Rock Drake[edit | source edit] Some creatures are naturally immune to radiation in the region, such as spino and Megalosaurus. If they are high enough levels, they can be used individually or in groups (preferably with mate-boost and masthead for better success) to kill aggressive Rock Drakes after grabbing an egg. Roll Rat/Ravager[editing | welding editing] Alternatively, a quick assembly can be used to can be fed with Mushroom Beer for to get away from the drakes that follow. Upon grabbing eggs, glider attachment equipped, hightail out of the nest for dino parking and escape from Element Falls. Spinosaurus/Megalosaurus[edit | source edit] Another way would be to bring a health-enhanced dino (preferably one that can be installed) and park somewhere above. Then bring a Ravager along with a Crossbow equipped with a few Climbing Picks and a few Zip-Line Anchors (zip line anchors and hooks don't work in the surrounding majority). Structures cannot be placed. If you bring megalosaurus or Spinos, be careful that if you go down the valley they will be stuck there). Place the artificial zip line around the slot to ensure a quick escape and lure all the aggravated Rock Drake towards the aforementioned dino (make sure you get away as quickly as possible to prevent death) and deal with them. In addition, using this method requires fighting any nearby Rock Drake while constantly escaping. If you bring Megalosaurus to pick up Rock Drake eggs, watch out for Purlovias, which can ambush you and stun you for 10 seconds. Karkinos [edit | source edit] Extremely mobile and moderately strong, Karkinos is a great choice, naturally being immune to radiation in the region. A good level is a very durable and his twin clamp attack is able to strike many Rock Drakes at the same time. But you can see that the Karkinos can't attack in the air, and because Drake's hit boxes are a priority over others, you can see yourself lifted by a large crowd of angry lizards and unable to resist. Always try to kill as many as you can before stealing any eggs. If patience is not your agreement, be sure to bring at least one tribal friend with powerful, radiation-immune creatures (such as mate-boosted or/and printed Megalosaurus or Spino), also consider being ready to defend from behind a Pump-Action Shotgun or Assault Rifle crab. With all caution, this method can prove to be extremely rewarding; Karkinos can reach any nest, delivering your survivors over the desired eggs, making you almost vulnerable to any threat that might hit you on your way back to the relative safety of a saddle. Reaper King[edit | source edit] Probably the best creature to collect the first Rock Drake Egg from a survivor, Reaper was almost never used mainly in their extremely harsh and time-consuming docile; While rock drakes themselves are advised to navigate the infested areas of the Reaper Queen, even private growers can see that a buddy-boosted duo of spinosaurs or Megalosaurus are able to send both unwanted Queens and easily weaken the desired one. You might also think that a structure-lined Paraceratherium used to sneak down their room and then set the trap for a trap (see Reaper for more information about domestication). Reapers - even Those who are able to either outrun or beat the completely wild Rock Drakes, also park, because of their jumping ability (and carkinos are very similar) they can reach any slot of your choice (get ready to spend some time park Reaper). If you choose to run, try using your jumping ability as much as possible (only when running, your base speed is roughly the same, if not slightly slower than wild Drakes). If fighting is the option you choose, remember to be careful not to put yourself among angry lizards and pools of abrasive elements, or you may be forced into a very toxic bath. On a final note, go ahead and get multiple eggs that don't get greedy but don't be greedy - most Reaper Kings don't want to carry less than 700 points of weight and mess up elemental areas with more than 50% of the weight capacity in use. Wild Rock Drakes is a largely foolish attempt to enter the field in the hope of getting an egg without the help of an assembly of any mount [edit | resource editing] as it will swarm around the thief who has it in his hands. However, if you plan this right, and you're having a full Single Armor you can make it even easier, because you're able to jet upwards with the chest part (assuming you carry enough elements that will last throughout the work). However, if this is not possible, read the pointers. Glide from the top of the world and approach the nests. After getting closer to the nest, watch the surroundings for the camouflaged Rock Drake. Some pointers to watch out for: Never look back. Rock Drakes will not stop following the gliding in particular. Don't go on any attack. Just run, remember the purpose, and don't deviate from it. Bring more than one climbing pull if necessary. Climbing Picks have stamina because this method requires constant climbing. Keep both eyes open. Even if it's not following the Rock Drakes, they're aggressive to the player alone by nature and don't hesitate to chase in front (especially because they're camouflaged). Never be blocked or heavy. Rock Drakes move fast and have trouble running away to have too much weight. You can also try to kill the nearby Rock Drakes, although you should always wait for more to come. Shotguns are a powerful weapon to use against them; Hatching in particular[edit | source edit] Rock Drake Eggs requires a very low temperature to hatch if you have more teammates around to help you. In a closed room at least 20 air conditioning and depending on the location will be required to reach the required heat. It takes about 3 days and 20 hours for an adult to grow up and will take Anonymous Poison for printing, petting can barely be a rare request... Domestication/Breeding of Multiple Dimetrodons may be a better option as you pile many of them into a small space and throw eggs in the middle to incubate them with no electricity needs. Notes/Trivia[edit | source] Ark First: Homestead, Rock Drake Were the first to be fertilized only to be made into a kibble. Rock Drake Egg temperature status is the opposite of hatching Wyvern Eggs (requires very high temperature). Rock Drake Eggs don't lay eggs, even if loot timers are 00:00. When these eggs are taken by a player, they will immediately rot and collect all the nearby drakes. In nests that don't lay new eggs, there's probably an egg cut into the ground under them. The command is used to DroppedItemGeneric_FertilizedEgg_RockDrake_NoPhysics_C wild rock drake egg server that is not taken by all players who do not cheat. Some Rock Drakes seem to remain in a frenzy even after falling aggro from a player. If the player they're crying returns to, they run to their position as if they were going to attack, then go back to normal behavior (unless they're aggro again because they're so close). Transferring eggs from one inventory to another within the nest area is counted as collecting an egg and all will aggro close
